GRAY BOX ILLUMINATES PROFILE OF VIDEO ART

Since Jan. 22, the Y Vaal Arts in Rockville at 155 Colte St. SW, has been transformed into a giant black box with works that incorporate painting and performance with video around the world and in particular the practices of three artists who have been selected because of the emerging collaborative potential that their work represents. Called "Suspension, an HD exhibition of the videos of three artists," the show is a joint effort of four artist groups who have been working together to create a single video installation. The show opens Feb. 18 and runs through March 17.

The show features the work of three artists: Robert Longo, who is known for his large-scale drawings of figures that are often inspired by the works of fellow artists; Bruce Nauman, who is known for his large-scale sculptures that are often made of industrial materials; and John Cage, who is known for his experiments with sound and silence. The show also includes a video installation by the French artist Jean-Luc Godard, who is known for his use of film and video as a medium for exploring the nature of art and the role of the artist in society.

The show aims to take advantage of the unique opportunities that are created by the HD format to create an immersive experience for the viewer. The show also includes a series of lectures and discussions with the artists and other experts in the field.

FIVE TO WATCH

1. Robert Longo: Known for his large-scale drawings of figures that are often inspired by the works of fellow artists, Longo's work is a testament to the power of the human figure to communicate complex ideas and emotions.

2. Bruce Nauman: Known for his large-scale sculptures that are often made of industrial materials, Nauman's work is a study of the relationship between the human body and the tools and machines of modern society.

3. John Cage: Known for his experiments with sound and silence, Cage's work is a study of the nature of art and the role of the artist in society.

4. Jean-Luc Godard: Known for his use of film and video as a medium for exploring the nature of art and the role of the artist in society, Godard's work is a study of the relationship between the human body and the tools and machines of modern society.

5. The HD exhibition of the videos of three artists: Called "Suspension, an HD exhibition of the videos of three artists," the show is a joint effort of four artist groups who have been working together to create a single video installation. The show opens Feb. 18 and runs through March 17.

The show features the work of three artists: Robert Longo, who is known for his large-scale drawings of figures that are often inspired by the works of fellow artists; Bruce Nauman, who is known for his large-scale sculptures that are often made of industrial materials; and John Cage, who is known for his experiments with sound and silence. The show also includes a video installation by the French artist Jean-Luc Godard, who is known for his use of film and video as a medium for exploring the nature of art and the role of the artist in society.

The show aims to take advantage of the unique opportunities that are created by the HD format to create an immersive experience for the viewer. The show also includes a series of lectures and discussions with the artists and other experts in the field.
Linda Healy pays tribute to gay rights at Dumpart's Hillyer

Allyed Artist

"Famous American Ink Art Print 2015"