The Washington Post E3 SUNDAY, JULY 19, 2015

GALLERIES

The art is not 'Strictly' anything, really

BY MARK JENKINS

The McLean Project for the Arts' blemnial "Strictly Painting" survey is 20 years old, so matter that this year's assortment, include semi-sculptural pieces that bend the picture plane, protrude from the wall and even dangle from the rafters. Or that one of the participants is actually a photographe.

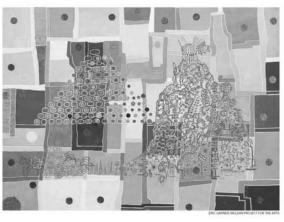

The show features 55 works by 38 regional to the properties actually a photographe.

The show features 55 works by 38 regional in form or technique are Richard Paul Welb-linger's neon-how, homoge the lost traditional in form or technique are Richard Paul Welb-linger's neon-how, photographic close-ups of flowers, Jackie Hoysted's colorful constructions of silver metal and painted wooden circles; and Sanzi Kermes's mobiles of paintern of the properties of the prop

Strictly Painting 10 On view through Aug. 1 at McLean Project for the Arts, 1234 Ingleside Ave., McLean. 703-790-1953. www.mpaart.org.

All We Art is featuring Spanish artist Ana Sediles watercolor paintings, such a "Watercolor 8,"

Above, Eric Garner's "Pyramid," which is part of the McLean Project for the Arts' blennial exhibition "Strictly Painting." The 10th edition features mobiles and photographs, not just paintings.

Ana Scédies Simplicity is paramount when painting in watercolor, which is Ana Sedies's principal medium. The Spanish artist, whose first American show is now at All We Art, executes land-and-seacupes that rely on fluid textures, simulating the play of light and a strong contrast between vertical and horizontal. In-however, that dominate. Working primarily in blus brown gray and the white of the underly-ing paper, the arist evokes the Mediterranean shore or bucelle streams. Two paintings show Central Park's bordered by skyscrapers, but Sedlies's pictures are rarely so urban or so specific. Drawing on memory of magnation rather than photographs, she paints moments in which what matters in not location but the underlying of the property of similarity and rippling currents.

Ana Sediles On view through July 26 at All We Art, 1666 33rd St. NW, 202-375-9713.

Kurt Godwin and Betsy Packard
There is no unifying motifin "Outliers: Kurt Godwin and Besty Packard," but that's inten-tional. Curator J.W. Mahoney calls the Ameri-can University Museum show "a sampler— not a retrospective." (Tet it does not of function as the latter for Godwin, who died last year.) Both local artists focus on the by nature, and in Packards, frequently the domestic realin, though it's sometimes eerily transformed.

of matter, and in Treakards, recogning the domestic realin, though it's one-times certification of the form this selection, Godwin often headed into the forest but rarely took the same style with him. "Through the Trees" breaks the view into near-abstract patterns, while "Dump in the Woods" is more realistic in its depiction of sky, foliage and detritus. His painting "Inventory of Everything" resembles a patchwork quilt, and thus it ventures close to Packards method. She can paint, but frequently uses fabric and found objects. She wrags common abrica and found objects. She wrags common short and the she was considered to the short of the she was a state of the she was a state of the she was a she was a state of the she was a she was a state of the she was a state of the

Outliers: Kurt Godwin and Betsy Packard On view through July 26 at the American University Museum, Katzen Arts Center, 4400 Massachuset Ave. NW. 202-885-1300, www.american.edu/muse

Joseph Crawford Pile

Joseph Crawford Pile
Growing up on a farm in Kentucky, Joseph Crawford Pile came to love the harsh music of pickups, dirt bikes and, swishing to a nearby Army base, military choppers. The artist music properties of the pile of the pile of pickups, dirt bikes and, swishing to a nearby Army base, military choppers. The artist
es as a small child, and some of those pictures are in his Hillbyer Art Space show "Vebticle Mischaving." These days, Piles mixed-media works are more sophisticated in technique, and more absurdist notufook. They also have streets of Baltimore, his current home.

Many of the recent pieces are small and on paper, as the earliest ones were, though they include abstract patterns that probably wouldn't occur to a young boy, Rendered in a poper, as the earliest ones were, though they include abstract patterns that probably
wouldn't occur to a young boy, Rendered in a pictures imagine epic battles in which motorcycles, helicopters and jacked-up 4-x-4 trucks contend on recognizable thoroughfares. (Pile labels one particularly barropies scenario a "lucid dream.") Viewers who don't share the artist's taste for demolition-derby action can still appreciate the street-cape.

Joseph Crawford Pile: 'Welicies Misbehaving

Joseph Crawford Pile: Vehicles Misbehaving On view through Aug. 1 at Hillyer Art Space, 9 Hillye Ct. NW. 202-338-0325, www.hillyerartspace.org.

John Stango

John Stango

In the world that Andy Warhot, Jasper Johns, Robert Rauschenberg and Roy Lichtenstein wrought, is it still possible to be a pop artis? Some may doubt it, but not John which are new on display at Artis's Proof, are derivative but hardly tentative. Stango brashly appropriates his predecessors' techniques and emphasizes bold, mostly primary, colors.
Stango depicts such mid-760s idols as John F. Kennedy, Muhammad All and Martlym Monroe — as well as superheroes and commercial insignaia — with a nitutire of revemercial insignaia — with a nitutire of revepose for Cadilliac, channel and Absolut — and Campbell's soup cans. The artist is a distant cousin of Norman Rockwell, but he's better at pop-cult images than everyday scenes. The least convicting picture here is a celeb- and logo-free view of DC. monuments.

